

Despite the purported diversification of the media, the media is becoming increasingly owned by just a few conglomerates. Those of us who can't afford cable are restricted to reading newspapers and getting our news from broadcast TV. The FCC should prevent single companies from owning multiple media outlets, such as newspapers and radio/TV stations in the same city. Given the current Administration's devotion to its corporate contributors, the FCC should resist as much as possible the effort by corporations to complete their stranglehold over the public's airwaves.
